Remember, too, that about one week before, the New York Democraf, now before, the New York Democrat, now the recognized organ of the Seymour

"If he is elected by unfair means, or use of illegal power—if he does not receive a majority of the 317 votes of the Electoral College, fairly cast—if he seeks to override a majority in America, he dies before his term of office shall one fourth expire, and the party that would thus upjustly elevate him to power shall be strangled in the blood it cries for P. WEST VIEGINIA.

On Thursday next the loyal men of West Virginia will be called upon to exercise those immutable, rights which constitute the badge of good citizenship—the rights of popular suffrage. The laws of the State have been framed so as to exclude from the polis, at less for a satisfactory probationary period, all those who by open rebellion forfeited their honors and their places in society. The wisdom of this measure has been amply vindicated by the fact that the State is now securely moored at the wharves of liberty, and is enjoying a prosperity which the Old Dominion never dreamed of. The spirit of Andrew Johnson, Tammany Hall, and the presiding officer of our own Nisi Prins has however been imbuing the malcontents of the monntains, and their wendom as showever been imbuing the malcontents of the monntains, and their wendom and easier souther rebuilders openly avow their determination to march to the polls and cast their ballots or prevent an election with their bayonets. Bloodshed may be expected, for what will not desperate mendare? The rebel army was a fit school for the training of desperadoes, and the teachings of the party with which they affiliate have served to add refanement to any schemes which savors of outrage and murder.

This aspect of affairs serves at least to baffie any attempt to clearly foreshadow the result. The loyal men of West Virginia can save the State to themselves if they are firm. The issue with them is as momentous as at any time during the war. When rebel hordes overran her borders, she learned by a sad experience what it was to have them in authority. It cannot be the with of any reasonable men in the d by a sad experience what it was to ave them in authority. It cannot be be wish of any reasonable man in the late, and especially any property older, to have the banditti empire of holder, to have the banditti empire of 1862, 1863 and 1864 reinstated. There was opportunity then for becoming acquainted with their practices, as there is now of learning the despicable arts by which they hope to regain what was lost when they were crushed by the armies of freedom. These schemes must be met by all the honorable means at hand. The registrars should be scrunglously exact in enforcing the be scruptiously exact in enforcing the letter of the law. No intimidation should unnerve them, no threats appai them, no asperities retard them. A full and faithful performance of duty under the provisions of the Legislature is exceeded forcers. ected of every official. The election f a full Republican ticket will secure Inder all the adverse circum tances, even the most sanguine friend of good order cannot expect to main-tain the seven thousand majority of other years. But this affords a good margin to work upon, and, without an actual retreat in the face of the foe, all actual retreat in the face of the foe, all their hellish appliances cannot overcome it. A victory for the Republican cause in West Virginia, on the 22d, will be doubly appreciated by the nation, because there the same arguments have been educed by the same parties who stood face to face during the war, the one fighting to protect and the other to sack the valley homes of the inhabitants. In the portions of the State where the opposition have not allowed defiance to mar the canyass, it allowed defiance to mar the canvass, i has been warm, and the prospects ar fiattering for the Republicans. Many of them speak with confidence of a triumph. The State has never been classed among the doubtful ones, and there, as everywhere else along border, fortitude must be added
